

Weekly Gas Comparables Analyses Added to Stratas Advisors' N. American Natural Gas Service

HOUSTON, April 20, 2017 /PRNewswire/ -- Extending coverage to weekly analysis of natural gas markets, Stratas Advisors now offers the Gas Comparables Weekly (GCW) report within its North American Natural Gas online research service. The weekly 'Comparables' analysis presents clear and actionable intelligence regarding natural gas fundamentals across the value chain.

"This 'quick read' addresses industry conditions, sentiment shifts and news flow for our subscribers," said Greg Haas, director of integrated energy research at the advisory firm, "while comparing industry performance against Stratas Advisors near-term outlooks which are updated quarterly."

"Gas withdrawals are stronger now than last year but below long-term averages," Haas noted in the most recent GCW report. "Gas supply should rise with recovering gas rig deployments. 2017 prices have been stronger, but market sentiment can change on a dime."

The weekly data "gives users a bead on the shifts we expect," Haas said. "We make comparative analysis of inventories, long and short positions in the CFTC's Commitment of Traders report, and other marketmoving news -- such as the four Permian Basin gas deals and FERC meeting notices this week."

Members access GCW reports within the North American Natural Gas Service via Stratas Advisors' online portal. This subscription-based service integrates the new weekly analysis with quarterly and annual outlooks across the upstream, midstream, and consuming sectors. It covers gas fundamentals (supply, prices, infrastructure and demand) across Canada, Mexico and the U.S.

Haas directs integrated energy research for Stratas Advisors. His team covers onshore oil, NGL and gas infrastructure, pricing, demand-side shifts and export facilities. Stratas Advisors' experts address global energy, fuel, power and petrochemicals sectors and offer insights on these industries and commodities markets.
